DE LONG DISCOVERED.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Secretary Chandler received to-night the following telegram from Engineer Melville:

"IRKUTSK, May 5, 1882.

"Secretary of Navy, Washington, D. C.: U. S. A.:

"Lena Delta, March 24, 1882.—Found De Long and party, dead; found all papers and books; will continue search for Chipp.

"(Signed) MELVILLE."

The sad dispatch of Melville's given above destroys the faint hope that De Long and his party might be found alive. The first news from this party was received on December 20th to the effect that the Jeannette was crushed in the ice June 11, 1881 and that boat number one in charge of Captain DeLong with twelve men, and boat number three in charge of Melville had reached the mouth of the Lena in great destitution. The second boat, in charge of Lieutenant Charles W. Chipp never has been heard from. Captain De Long's boat contained the following, all of whom, except Nindermann and Noras, who were the two men sent forward to obtain assistance, are lost:

FIRST CUTTER.

Lieutenant George W. De Long.
Dr. James M. Ambler.
Jerome J. Collins.
William Nindermann.
Louis Noras.
Hans Erikson.
Henry Kunck.
Adolf Dressler.
Carl Gortz.
Walter Lee.
Nells Ivorsens.
George Boyd.
Alexis.
Ah Loon.

This second cutter which has never been heard from contained the following:

SECOND CUTTER.

Lieutenant Charles W. Chipp.
Captain William Dunbar.
Alfred Sweetman.
Henry Warren.
Peter Johnson.
Edward Starr.
Shawell.
Albert Kellow.

The third boat, which contained Melville and Danenhauer, and was saved, had the following:

Engineer George W. Melville.
Lieutenant J. W. Danenhauer.
Jack Cole.
James Bartlett.
Raymond Newcomb.
Herbert Leach.
George Landertack.
Henry Wilson.
Manson.
Ahfoth.
Long Sing.

The Jeannette Expedition.

The following account of the Jeannette expedition is taken from the New York Herald:

In 1878 the steam yacht Pandora, then returned from a brief but successful Arctic voyage, under the command of Captain Laing, was purchased by Mr. Bennett and sent to San Francisco to be fitted out for an expedition in search of the North pole. One year later she was ready for sea, and on the 8th of July, 1879, she sailed out of the Golden Gate, attended by a great number of small boats bearing various committees and delegates of citizens, and the honest godspeed of the American people. Her commander, Lieutenant G. W. De Long, had already seen service in the Arctic, whither he went in 1873 in the Juniata, to search for the survivors of the ill-fated Polaris. The Juniata reached Upernavik, the most northern settlement in Greenland, but was unable to proceed any further, so he organized and commanded an expedition in a small steam launch and proceeded northward. But he fell under the fascinating influence of the northern Sphinx, like Franklin and so many other famous explorers who have essayed a solution of its mystery. There is a legend of the south that whoever drinks the water of the Rio Grande will return again to it before he dies, and there is another not phrased, but as truthful, that one who beholds the eternal ice will return again to look at it. Lieutenant DeLong was selected for the command of the Jeannette expedition on account of his rare fitness for such a work. A man of magnificent physique, iron will and perfect knowledge of the problems to be solved by the successful issue of such a journey, he was fitted in all ways for the task. Although he had investigated the Baffin's Bay route and was informed, from personal conversation with Weyprect and Payer, of the advantages and disadvantages of the Franz Josef route, he preferred to try to reach the supreme spot by the untried way, and so selected the route via Behring Strait. In the adoption of this route he was influenced by a number of considerations. In the first place it was a cherished theory of Petermann's that Wrangell Land was a continuation or extension of Greenland, reach[illegible] the Polar basin, and one not without foundation in the analogies of physical geography. This fifth ocean imagined by Polar sea had waned, and it was the conviction of scientific minds that if the Pole was to be reached it would only be done by sledging. Now the character of the ice about Wrangell Land was such that it presented less difficulties than the fields about Smith's Sound or Franz Josef Land, and this was a powerful inducement to go by that route. When tempt the former [illegible] De Long left [illegible] position it was supposed, of course, [illegible] Wrangell Land was a considerable [illegible] but last summer Lieutenant Berry, in the Rodgers, proved it to be an insignificant island, and this discovery discredited all the theories that had been formed of its [illegible]. Some scientific men supposed that having sighted Wrangell Land, the Jeannette was driven in the ice pack away to the eastward and forced down on the American coast. When this theory was subject of much interest, brought to Amerika by a San Francisco whaler, that a party of white men were making their way down the Mackenzie river. Search to prove the validity of the theory [illegible] was at once concluded that the white men could be no other than a remnant of the Jeannette's crew. It was objected that these men might be survivors of the wrecked whalers. Mount Wallaston or Victoria, but the answer was made that it was highly improbable that ordinary sailors would select such a scientific method of retreat, and with some show of validity it was [illegible] that when whalers are wrecked they remain whatever they land and wait for help rather than fight their way out over a country where death lurks at every step to gather them in. There was a gradually forming conviction that these white men, who were reported ascending the Mackenzie river, were no other than the survivors of the Jeannette, and Lieutenant Hoogaard, of the Danish navy and one of Nordenskjold's companions [illegible] memorable passage of the Vega, startled the world with the information that the Esquimaux, emigrant along the northern Siberian coast in the neighborhood of the mouth of the Yenesi river, had reported to the Norwegian whalers hunters that they had found the bodies of two Europeans on the coast during the summer march. This news completely upset the theory which even the Royal Geographical society of Great Britain did not disdain entertain, and with such force as to [illegible] that the government instruct the Hudson's Bay Fur company to make a search along the Mackenzie river.

All the ascertained facts about the arctic currents in the vicinity of Wrangell Island were against the conclusion that the Jeannette, when last seen, was forced to the eastward, but still was admitted that such might be the case. When, however, Lieutenant Hoogaard made his statements the rational theory is she had been forced westward again by ice sway, and it now finds demonstration in the facts reported by cable.

LATE ACCOUNTS.

Since the Jeannette left San Francisco in July, 1879, she has been heard of but twice, and then through the Herald correspondent on board, who wrote long and interesting letters from Plover station, in the harbor of Onalaska, and Lawrence Bay, detailing the doings of the party up to August 25. In September of the same year it was reported that the Jeannette had been seen in Kotzebue Sound, but this is denied later in the year. In 1880, accord[illegible] to Danish authority a steamer's mast was seen near the mouth of the Lena river by the Yakuts living there, but in the transmission of this story from tribe to tribe, to the mouth of the Lena west to the Kara, where the walrus hunters heard it, it is no doubt somewhat damaged. Some say that the story was one concerning the Vega and that the report was an old one, originating with the natives who had not been in communication with Nordenskjold, but who had seen his vessel pass.

MORE EXPEDITIONS.

Notwithstanding that nothing was heard of the Jeannette for a year and a half no grave apprehensions were entertained, until the spring of the present year. News being still forthcoming at that time it was deemed wise to execute some concerted plan of action for the discovery of the whereabouts of the ship and her crew. Not since Franklin's absence enlisted the anxiety of the world has any explorer been the subject of such universal comment as De Long, and the present year will be memorable in the annals of Arctic [illegible] no less on account of the termination of Jeannette expedition, than for the general activity evinced in the search for her.

The United States alone sent out five expeditions into the polar Basin, with instructions to seek and [illegible] the explorers. England was represented by a private gentleman, Mr. Leigh Smith, who gallantly took upon himself the duty of searching in the region of Franz Josef Land, [illegible] another expedition, under Dutch auspices, [illegible] the ship Wilhelm Barentz, volunteered to [illegible] the search for the Jeannette part of [illegible] programme. Of the four expeditions sent by the United States, the most important was that in the Rodgers, under command of Lieutenant Berry. Although the Rodgers was more successful than the others in the first object of her search her commander [illegible] great geographical results, for he went that Wrangel Land was an island instead of a vast polar encompassing [illegible].

The next expedition in order was that of the Alliance, [illegible] the command of Commander Wells. The Rodgers and Alliance left America almost simultaneously, the first from San Francisco, the second from Norfolk, Va. The Rodgers was sent over the same route pursued by the Jeannette, in the hope of finding on Wrangell Land some record of the progress of the party or a cairn there, and the Alliance was sent to the waters north of Spitzbergen, on the supposition that the party had made their way across the pole on Wrangell land.

THE PETERMANN THEORY.

The theory on which the Alliance was sent here to look for De Long has not been fully explained in print. It was an outcome of the labors of the Jeannette relief board, and the reasons, briefly stated, were these: At the time she started the Petermann idea had not been invalidated by the discoveries of Lieutenant Berry, and it was argued that if De Long had landed on Wrangell land and sledged his way to the pole he would either make his way to Smith sound or Spitzbergen, where he would be sure of finding whalers and walrus hunters, or at last more likely than by returning to the lower extremity of Wrangell land. The lower end of Wrangell land, the only place De Long would be likely to meet with whalers to bring him home via the Pacific is about one thousand one hundred and eighty-five miles distant from that point. Admitting then that he reached the pole, and on sledges and deprived of his ship, this would be the scientific way for him to escape, and so on these premises, the Alliance was sent on the search. Her trip proved at least that De Long had not come out that way, and one fertile source of conjecture was obliterated. She went within five hundred and ninety miles of the pole, a feat only excelled by two other ships in all the history of Arctic navigation, and returned home within six months.

THE RODGERS.

The Rodgers still remains in the Arctic, and during the coming winter her commander will search the Siberian coast where De Long is now reported cast away, and in all probability learn what is now announced to the world via Europe. So much for the foremost of the two expeditions. Third in order comes that made by Captain Hooper in the revenue cutter Corwin. The captain in addition to his usual duties as agent of the secretary of the treasury, was instructed to go to Wrangell Land during his summer cruise and search for traces of the Jeannette. He succeeded in reaching its inhospitable shores but could find no trace of the missing ship and returned to report as much.

OTHER EXPEDITIONS.

The other two expeditions were primarily for meteorological purposes, but each was instructed to keep a bright lookout for the Jeannette, and to consider it an important part of their duty. The first of these was under the command of Lieutenant Greely, with a station at Lady Franklin Bay, in Smith Sound, and the second was located at Point Barrow, the northern extremity of Alaska, under command of Lieutenant Ray. From this it will be seen that no comprehensive scheme of relief was ever organized as that instituted by the United States government for the Jeannette. Four of the most important points of egress were covered—the northern shores of Siberia by Lieutenant Berry; Point Barrow, on Alaska, by Lieutenant Ray; Smith Sound by Lieutenant Greely and Spitzbergen by Commander Wallelgh. Nor was this all, for Mr. Leigh Smith, in his yacht the Eira, a little craft of about three hundred and fifty tons burden, promised, before he left Peterhead last summer, to keep a diligent watch for the missing Americans. Who can tell, since he himself has not returned to relate the history of the summer cruise, whether his philanthropy did not lead him into danger and prevent his return? Some powerful incentive must have made him regardless of that rare caution that for fifteen years has stood him in such good stead in his Arctic journeys. His cruising ground was south of the eastward of the Alliance in the region of Franz Josef Land, where Weyprect and Payer were cast away in the Tegethoff.

This much had already been done for the relief of the Jeannette and still the activity went on. The Royal Geographical society of Great Britain, as has been stated, was still actively engaged in devising plans for relief expeditions and Lieutenant Hoogaard was planning an expedition to go over the track which he had sailed before in the Vega for the purpose of searching the shores of Siberia.

A PROPHECY.

Probably in the history of Arctic theorizing there is no more magnificent piece of inferential reasoning than that of the young Danish lieutenant. It is prophetic in its conclusion, notwithstanding that the facts on which it is based are now proved to have no bearing on the result. In advocating his plan Lieutenant Hoogaard said:

"On September 15 a Yakut claims to have seen steamer smoke opposite the mouth of the river Lena, and if this is not a mistake it must have been the Jeannette. Certainly it is not improbable that De Long tried in vain to go north along the eastern, as well as the western coast of Wrangell Land, and that while making continued fruitless attempts at that aim he has gone more and more westward. The next trace is found at the mouth of the Yenisei, where last winter some Samoyedes discovered two European corpses with a bottle of whisky at their side. This being true, we have another unmistakable trace of the Jeannette, and in that case I think Lieutenant De Long has continually followed the coast westward, without being able to penetrate those ice fields which, toward the north, are bordering on the open coast water. In that way he has arrived near the northern part of Asia. Reasoning by what one of Lieutenant De Long's comrades said to me at Yokutsaan in 1879.—'Either he will reach the North Pole or we will never see him again.'—I think he has been reasoning about thus:—'As yet it has been impossible to go north. As I am going more westward I will come to Franz Josef Land, where the chances are no better. Then here or never!' And thereupon he has turned the Jeannette toward the north. The reason why, basing my belief on the two last named rumors,—which, of course, I cannot guarantee—I think he has come so far, is that the corpses were found at the mouth of the Yenisei. They indicate undoubtedly that the Jeannette has either been crushed in the ice or, like the Tegethoff, has become imprisoned in the land ice opposite to some polar land as yet unknown, and that, at least a part of the crew has tried to reach inhabited regions in sledges, those who reached the furthest are the less unfortunate, the bodies of whom have been found. If the Jeannette were left far east of Cape Tshaljeskin it would have been more natural to go for the inhabited places at the Lena, and I am therefore of the opinion that her crew must have come ashore somewhere near."

THE JEANNETTE.

The Jeannette was a bark rigged steamer of 420 tons register. She was a long, low craft, with considerable rake. She was originally built by the British government as a despatch boat and tender to the Mediterranean squadron. Having no use for her after she was built the royal navy offered her for sale, and she was purchased by Captain Allan Young, an enthusiastic English yachtsman and an Arctic navigator, who accompanied Sir Leopold McClintock in the successful search for the Franklin relics. After Captain Young made one trip in her she was purchased by Mr. Bennett, and by special act of congress registered as an American vessel under her present name. She was what was called a long-legged ship that is, she had a wedge-shaped floor, so that it was supposed if she were caught in the ice she would be raised instead of being crushed, as is so common with flat-floored or wall-sided ships.

Notwithstanding that the Jeannette proved her worth as an Arctic vessel when Captain Allan Young sailed in her, she was turned over to the naval authorities at Mare Island, San Francisco, when she arrived there and fortified until it was declared that it would be impossible to "ship" her.

HER CREW.

She took with her to the Arctic a complement of thirty-one all told as follows:—

Lieutenant George W. De Long, United States Navy, Commander. He was born in New York city in 1844 and was appointed an acting midshipman October 1, 1861, and in the ordinary course of promotion he was made a lieutenant in 1868. In 1873 he was appointed navigator of the relief ship Juniata, sent to the Arctic to relieve the survivors of the Polaris, as previously stated.

Lieutenant Charles W. Chipp, U. S. N., was second in command and was born in Kingston, N. Y. He was the companion of De Long in his perilous journey in the Little Juniata in Melville Bay. During his career in the navy he fought in the Cocan war, served long on the Asiatic station and was in Santiago de Cuba during the Virginius excitement.

Master John Wilson Danenhauer, U. S. N., the third officer, was born in Chicago, Ill., September 30, 1849. He graduated from the Naval academy in 1870 and served two years with the European squadron in the Juniata; was with the Portsmouth two years on a surveying and exploring expedition. In 1875 he was detailed for duty at the naval observatory whence he was ordered to the Vandalia, where he received his orders to join the Jeannette.

Past Assistant Engineer George W. Melville was born in New York city in January, 1841. He, like the first two officers, has had previous Arctic experience. He was engineer on the Tigress during her cruise after Buddington and his party from the Polaris. He served on the Chattanooga during the war and had when he left with the Jeannette twelve years of sea service.

Dr. James Markham Marshal Ambler was born in Fauquier county, Va., in December, 1848. He was the son of a physician and was educated at Washington and Lee college, Virginia, and graduated in 1870 from the University of Maryland with honor. He practiced medicine for three years in Baltimore and joined the navy in 1874.

Jerome J. Collins, scientist and Herald special correspondent, who was in charge of the land parties, was born in Cork, Ireland, in 1841. He was the son of Mr. Mark Collins, a merchant and manufacturer, and a member for twenty-two years of the town council. He was a pupil of Sir John Benson, and was engaged for many years at engineering works in America and Europe, but eight years ago he abandoned his profession to organize the Herald weather bureau.

Raymond L. Newcomb, taxidermist, is a native of Salem, Mass., where he was born in January, 1849. He was recommended for the post by Professor Baird, of the Smithsonian institution.

Captain William Dunbar, ice pilot, a native of New London, Conn., was born in 1834, and had been for thirty-six years a whaler. He was familiar with the North Pacific whaling grounds, and had even had experience in the ice-bound seas of the Antarctic.

The crew was composed of the following:

Jack Cole, boatswain.
Alfred Sweetman, carpenter's mate.
William Nindelman, carpenter.
George Washington Boyd, carpenter.
Walter Lee, machinist.
George Landertack, coal heaver.
Louis Philip Noras, seaman.
Herbert Wood Leach, seaman.
Henry David Warner, seaman.
James H. Bartlett, seaman.
George Stephenson, seaman.
Adolph Dressler, seaman.
Carl August Gortz, seaman.
Peter Edward Johnson, seaman.
Henry Wilson, seaman.
Edward Star, seaman.
Hans Haelnor Erickson, seaman.
Henry Hansen Kanck, seaman.
Nells Ivorsen, seaman.
Albert George Kellow, seaman.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

The Cabinet Discuss the Chinese Bill and Postpone to Tuesday.

Senator Blair Examined by the Foreign Committee.

The New Secretary Reports on the Condition of the Navy.

SENATOR FAIR ON THE CHINESE QUESTION.—CHICAGO, May 5.—A Washington special says that the wealthiest man in the senate today, perhaps, is Senator Fair, of Nevada. This millionaire representative of the far western section of the country is, above all others, easiest approached. He was found quietly seated this evening in his private parlors at the Arlington, and when addressed on the Chinese question said: "I am very largely interested in California and Nevada, and have seen them (the Chinese), although I never employ Chinese as against white laborers. Among the objections to them is that they work for such small prices that white girls and servants cannot make an honest living. It appears that the Chinese take every possible source of labor from them. While this applies particularly to California, it is equally true of Nevada. They have their opium dens, and sell opium and smoke it, and when apprehended as criminals escape into underground dens, which extend to mammoth proportions, and cannot be found. Their employment by me as laborers would be a great saving, but I do not employ them, and am in for the removal of the curse and competition. They come to California under the auspices and servitude of the six companies, and every year they send home from forty to forty-five million dollars to their people; and were it not that California is blessed with plenty and possesses such large resources she could not stand such a drain. This is why rich men will not live among them and many worthy citizens have removed from the state and taken millions of dollars of capital out of it with them. I may have an elegant block of buildings in their quarter, but I cannot rent it or hire it. They have a filth and stench which no human white can bear."

CONDITION OF THE NAVY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5.—A communication from the secretary of the navy in response to a house resolution calling for information relative to the condition of the navy, contains tabulated statements showing the time and cost of repairs of each vessel of the navy, engaged in battle with the enemy, or some general classification omitting hulks unfit for repairs. There are sixty-three vessels in the list; 33 reported efficient for immediate use. To put in condition the remaining 30 it is estimated would cost $3,175,000, and the time necessary variously estimated at from two to 18 months each; 18 months being the estimated time required on five vessels. The communication also embodies a detailed statement of repairs on vessels since '65, the total being $23,075,000. Total cost of vessels in the navy is $73,385,706.

BLAIR'S EXAMINATION.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The examination of Senator Blair was resumed to-day. Witness refused to state the amount of stock tendered him by Shipherd, and said Blaine understood at the first interview that I appeared there as counsel. He knew I was desirous of aiding Shipherd. I asked the secretary if from his knowledge of the affair, there could be any impropriety in acting as counsel, and he said he could see none. I never concealed my connection with the company. I should do the same thing over with the same light. I've no apology to offer here or elsewhere.

I never regarded the scrip of any value unless the agreement with Peru had been carried out. There was no organized company at that time. Being asked how he heard General Grant's opinion on the matter witness hoped the committee would not make personal queries. He had heard Grant's views in various ways, but none of his expressions of opinion were discreditable to Grant, but on the contrary. The attitude of the state department was never stated more fully than indicated in Blaine's instructions given in June. Witness could not say Shipherd had willfully misrepresented him. The committee could judge of Shipherd themselves. Witness had never put things in so strong a light as Shipherd's hopeful nature had conceived. He didn't hear Blaine say "I don't think that will fetch him" on the occasion when Shipherd told Blaine he had offered Hurlbut a bribe. Witness knew nothing of the Arizona letter till it was sent. A number of inquiries were put as to Blaine's duty in the case, but nothing was developed except the personal opinion of the witness.

CABINET MEETING.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The cabinet meeting to-day was brief and unimportant. The Chinese bill was read and informally discussed. It will be again considered at the next meeting. The Indian question was also considered.

NO ACTION ON THE BILL.

WASHINGTON, May 5. Considerable disappointment was expressed in Pacific coast circles this evening that the president did not take action on the new Chinese bill to-day, and there is much comment of an unfavorable nature upon the announcement that it will be further considered by the cabinet council next Tuesday. Delay and postponements of this nature very naturally give rise to uneasiness in regard to the fate of a strongly controverted measure awaiting the president's approval, and in view of Arthur's veto of the former Chinese bill there are, of course, special grounds for mistrust concerning his action upon this measure. It should be borne in mind, however, that the bill was not officially sent to him until this morning; that several other matters needed immediate attention; that the attorney general, whose opinion would naturally be desired in a cabinet consultation on any such subject, was not in town to-day, and also, above all that, President Arthur is habitually inclined to procrastinate his decisions on all important questions. This tendency on his part is so well known among his personal and political associates that it would have been in fact a matter of great surprise to them had he affixed his signature to the Chinese bill to-day, even if they knew positively in advance that he had definitely determined to approve it, without submitting it to his constitutional advisers for the cabinet consideration. While therefore his republican friends in the Pacific coast delegation regret that he has not already signed the bill, they are not surprised at the delay and continue to be as confident as heretofore that he will approve it. This [illegible], aside from general considerations is based not only upon the president's own utterance but also upon expressions of sympathy in regard to the new bill, which have been made to various members of the delegation very recently by Attorney-General Brewster and Secretary Lincoln, each of whom indicated that there would be no doubt of the presidential approval of the measure. Another ground for confidence may be found in the fact that the cabinet as now constituted includes two new members, namely Teller and Chandler, who are known to be strong sympathizers with Pacific coast sentiment on this question, the former having, indeed, while in the senate, voted to pass the vetoed bill over the president's veto.

HENRY'S REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Secretary Chandler has received the following dispatch from Lieut. Berry, commander of the U. S. steamer Rodgers:

IRKUTSK, May 1, 1882.

To Hon. W. E. Hunt, secretary of the navy, Washington, D. C.:

The Rodgers was destroyed by fire, originating from the hold November 30. Efforts to save the ship were futile. The people were landed safely, but with difficulty, through the young ice, and are now quartered in the natives' houses. But little clothing and one month's provisions saved. Native food is abundant. No danger of starvation. The bearer of a dispatch is en route.

[Signed] R. N. BERRY.

March 18, 1882.

GUITEAU'S AUTOGRAF.

WASHINGTON, May 5. Guiteau yesterday was full of spirits, but reproved visitors who said he looked like Oscar Wilde. Wilde was beneath his notice. He had brains; Wilde had none. He importunes everybody to buy his photographs and autographs to the disgust of visitors in the jail.

SENATE PROCEEDINGS.

Windom's resolution to inquire what money, if any, had been raised and to whom paid, to influence the passage of the house bill on distilled spirits in bonds, was adopted.

Debate on the court of appeals bill was resumed.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The treasury department to-day purchased 385,000 ounces of silver.

J. D. Defrees, ex-public printer, is in an extremely critical condition.

Citizens of Broadway, Va., appeal to the senate from the postoffice department.

John Shaw has been sentenced to be hanged January 19th, 1883, for the murder of his sister July 16th, 1881.

The secretary of war informs the house that there are in Arizona 2,273 enlisted men and 130 officers in addition to the forces under General Forsythe.

Berry to-day presented a numerously signed petition of citizens of Marcer county, asking the enactment of a postal telegraph law similar to that now in force in Great Britain.

A final vote will be taken in the house of representatives on the tariff commission bill to-morrow. Its passage by a handsome majority of thirty or forty is practically certain.

The regular proceedings in the case of the United States vs. Brady, Dorsey, Turner and others, were begun in the criminal court to-day. General Brady and Turner were the only defendants present at the opening.

The chairman of the republican congressional committee intends to call a meeting of that body for the purpose of electing a secretary. Col. D. B. Henderson, who was chairman of the delegation in Chicago, is a candidate.

The secretary of the navy has received a telegram from the commander of the U. S. steamer Brooklyn stating that that vessel while at anchor at Montevideo was run into by the steamer Mozart and cut down to the water's edge.

A letter from the secretary of the treasury was laid before the senate to-day showing the total amount of revenue collected on raw cotton from the time the tax was imposed in 1862 until it was repealed in 1868, including that received from all states and territories. The the amount was $33,079,333.29.

How about the senatorship and the cabinet?

Danenhauer reached St. Petersburg only three days before the arrival of the news that De Long was dead. It must have given him a very vivid appreciation of the dangers he had escaped.

Our dispatches state the Toluca branch of the Mexican National Railway company will soon be opened. This is the most difficult part of the road which the Mexican National will build, and, when completed, the worst obstacle will be out of the way.

The Democrat is charging all kinds of fraud and bribery on the republican party in Leadville, but it will create little impression, because the frauds are not confined to any one party. They belong to politics. If the Democrat will denounce its own party its denunciations of the republican party will have a better effect.

We understand that Senator Teller secured the removal of Colonel Page from the Southern Ute agency, on the ground of drunkenness. If this is true, we cannot understand why he should make him a member of the Ute commission. If he was removed from one office for incompetency, it is not looking after the interests of the government to give him another office of even greater trust. It rather forces the conclusion that drunkenness was used as only a pretext for removing Page and giving it to a more pronounced friend of Senator Teller.

Of course the conservatives in England are making all the capital possible out of Gladstone's alleged retreat. They claim he should have resigned and a new ministry formed. But there is nothing to show that the release of the Irish members is a retreat. The imprisoned parties made certain promises. It is fair to infer that these promises are in the line of Gladstone's policy. Possibly they have declared that they will no longer advise the "no rent" policy and will cease all attempts to excite sedition. If they have done this it is perfectly consistent with Gladstone's past policy to release them. They were imprisoned more for the danger they might do than for the danger they had done. Until it is apparent that Parnell and other members of parliament did not make promises to secure release from imprisonment, it is grossly unfair to Gladstone's administration to say that he has retreated.

What has been feared for weeks has proven true. De Long and his brave party are dead, dying from exposure and starvation. We know nothing yet of their experience since the two men went forward for help last November. The two men were saved, but they traveled too far and were in a too desolate country to get the aid in season. Efforts were immediately made to find De Long but without success, and it is probable that his party perished soon after the two men left them. We present this morning a full story of the voyage of the Jeannette with the names of the lost. The sad news will be received with universal sorrow. The whole civilized world was interested first in their scientific researches, but later in their struggle for life. For twenty-one months they had been locked up in the ice. Then after their ship was destroyed, they floated in the ice for four months and finally landed on the desolate mainland. Exhausted and starving, the party of De Long could only make a feeble struggle for life and then gave it up. The wailing, anxious relatives now know the worst. The sympathy of the whole country will be given them.

In this matter, the GAZETTE needs to reflect, if it be capable of comprehending such a thing, that the faiths and the purposes of the republican party rise to something higher and greater than the offices or the method of their bestowal. [Leadville Chronicle.

We are glad to hear this from the Chronicle as it is what we have always maintained. But President Arthur seems to think the most important part of his duties is to run the patronage of the government in the interest of a faction in the party. His whole time practically is devoted to the appointment of office-holders. This business is altogether too petty for the president. He might appoint members of the cabinet, judges of the United States supreme court and circuit courts, and foreign ministers, but no others. The heads of the departments should arrange for the appointment of all under them. Then let the appointments be for life or good behavior. Had this been the policy of the government Garfield might now be living. He was disgusted in the very beginning of his administration with the experience he had with making appointments. He preferred to decide questions of state rather than who should hold some petty place. This ought to be the feeling of Arthur, but he cannot rise to it.

An English paper records the departure for New York of a party of forty young men, sons of gentlemen, on their way to Minnesota, where they are to be placed as pupils with American farmers. It is said that this is the second party which has come to the United States for the same purpose.

The sum of $8.67, which remained of the fund used in celebrating in Portsmouth, N. H., on the 22d of February, 1832, the centenary of Washington's birth, was deposited in the local savings bank against the bi-centennial celebration, and now, at the expiration of half the time, amounts to $143.58.

"Well, my little man, aren't you barefoot rather early this season?" said a benevolent gentleman to a New Haven youngster this morning. "Guess not. Was born barefoot, I was." "I declare you was; so you was." "What a pity, what a pity. Well, Nature is unkind to the poor, really," and he gave the youngster a dime to atone for the neglect of the "mother of us all."—[New Haven Register.

Marie Henriette, queen of the Belgians, is a comely, middle-aged woman, more sad than joyous, though she takes an interest in many things. She thinks a good deal about her two grandchildren, and writes every day to one or the other of her married daughters. Her greenhouses, which are the finest, perhaps, on the continent, afford a daily occupation, and her horses and ponies and her dogs are under her supervision. One of the latter she long carried in her arms on all state occasions, and it was always draped in the color of her mistress' dress.

Very Ancient English.

Demorest's Monthly for May.

Ethnologists say that the people whose earliest traces are found in England were like the modern Australians. They were black men with low brows, and were very inferior specimens of humanity. These were all destroyed during the glacial period, when Great Britain was covered with icebergs. After the ice age, and when Britain became habitable again, a new race made its appearance, some of the descendants of which are a part of the English nation. What they were originally we only know from tombs or barrows, in which are found their skeletons, weapons, domestic utensils and ornaments. They were a dark, short and thick set race. Their skulls were very long and narrow. They were unacquainted with metals, and used stone implements in war and agriculture. They seemed to live in little communities after a socialistic fashion, and it is certain that they had some domestic animals, among others, pigs. These stone age men, as they were called, would cut a sorry figure beside the Englishmen of to-day, for the latter is the product of mixed and very much superior races.

In the Mouth of a Volcano.

Demorest's Monthly.

An astronomical observatory on the top of Mount Ætna has just been completed. It is built at an elevation of nearly 10,000 feet above the sea, and is the highest spot in the world occupied by an observatory. The site, be it understood, is inside the crater, and when an eruption takes place the base of the observatory will be surrounded by streams of red-hot lava. It is believed, however, that the eminence upon which the edifice is constructed will remain solid. Owing to haze and obscurations in our atmosphere there are very few nights in the year suitable for observation. But the Ætna observatory will be so far above the zones of disturbance and obscuration that it will give it advantages far superior to any watch-tower in the world. The expense of this observatory is borne by the city of Catania. It is not, however, to be a local institution, for men of science from all parts of the world are invited to make use of it. Apropos of this matter of observatories, two of the buildings on the summit of Mount Hamilton, in this country, for the Lick observatory, have been completed, and the great telescope, the greatest in the world, will be completed before the close of the year 1883. This immense instrument is to cost $50,000. The apparatus will be very complete, and the only observatory in the world that can compete with the Lick is the one just completed in Mount Ætna.

Among Icebergs.

Speaking of the experience of the steamship Craighall, which arrived from Glasgow yesterday, after an eighteen days' passage, the mate said: "The rapidity of the change from a sweltering summer's heat to an Arctic frost caused no little amazement. 'Icebergs on the starboard bow,' hailed by the lookout, followed by reports of others being seen, explained the mystery. Right in the track of vessels were seen monstrous mountains of ice, some of them pure white, others perceptibly marked by strong veins of blue. They were of various sizes, and, with the field of ice, extended many miles. The sea broke against them, forcing torrents of spray up their sides. The sun had melted the upper parts of many of them into the most fanciful shapes, resembling crags, cliffs, and castles. Streams of water in picturesque cascades were flowing down into the sea. The huge masses seemed to be moving slowly to the southeast. The vessel passed near enough several of them to distinguish plainly the noise of the waves as they broke against the rugged sides of the bergs." [New York Sun.

The Impossible Girl.

Puck.

He offered her a handsome opal ring. "Excuse me," she said, while a blush crept over her velvety cheek; "opals are unlucky." Then he fished a package of caramels out of his pocket and attempted to present it to her. "I never touch them," she murmured, languidly, "as they destroy the teeth and draw the fillings out. My mother got some between her teeth the other day, and her jaws were held together so tight for two hours that she could not talk." "You must have had quiet in the house." "Sir?" "What must have had a riot in the house. I mean that your mother must have been so provoked that she couldn't preserve her usual state of beautiful serenity, but was obliged to give way to her feelings, in spite of her heroic efforts to appear calm. Would you like to go to the minstrels to-night?" "No, I thank you," she whispered feelingly, "I am always saddened by such woeful dramas as 'Camille,' 'Hamlet,' and 'Miss Multon,' and the last time I was at the minstrels I saw how those plays could be made more heartrending with the jokes of the minstrels worked into them." He then invited her to take a walk and partake of ice cream and other luxuries calculated to thrill the feminine mind with ecstasy. But she refused each and all of them. And the young man danced around with his pocket-book in his hand, and thought what expense would be saved if all the girls were like this one. And he sung:

"I've found the wife of the future,
I've found the impossible girl."

Then he woke up and ascertained that he had been dreaming. The impossible girl has yet to be discovered.

Canals on the Planet Mars.

London Times.

Sir—I possess thirty or forty views of Mars presented to me sixteen years ago by the Rev. Mr. Dawes, in which, though he used but an eight-inch telescope, some of the long, narrow passages mentioned by Mr. Webb are shown. I mention this because it may serve to corroborate what otherwise might seem improbable—the circumstance that Signor Schiaparelli should have seen with his comparatively small telescope what has escaped the attention of observers using such instruments as the Herschelian reflectors, the three-foot reflector made by Mr. Common, and the magnificent twenty-six-inch refractor of Washington. Albeit until observers with such instruments as these have distinctly seen what Signor Schiaparelli has mapped we must not too hastily assume that these are real features of Mars. Mr. Nathaniel Green, whose fine lithographs of Mars adorn a recent volume of the "Memoirs of the Astronomical Society," considers that these narrow passages are due to an optical illusion (which he has himself experienced).

Should it be proved that the net work of dark streaks has a real existence we should by no means be forced to believe that Mars is a planet unlike our earth, but we might perhaps infer that engineering works on a much greater scale than any which exists on our globe have been carried on upon the surface of Mars. The smaller force of Martian gravity would suggest that such works could be much more easily conducted on Mars than the earth, as I have elsewhere shown. It would be rash, however, at present to speculate in this way.

RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Wealth in the Senate.

Portland Argus.

The present senate contains at least a score of senators not one of whom is worth less than $200,000. The richest man is, of course, Fair, of Nevada, who probably possesses as much wealth as all the other senators together. Next to him is David Davis, of Illinois, a widower, who is reputed to be the possessor of millions. It is somewhat difficult to name the senator whose fortune ranks third in size; but if Eugene Hale has received the mantle of his father-in-law, Zach Chandler, with its well-lined pockets, his fortune is nearly as large as that of David Davis. The wife of Senator Hale is the only daughter of the late Senator Zach Chandler. Other very wealthy senators are Miller, of California, Mahone, of Virginia, and Sawyer, of Wisconsin, known to be worth more than a million each. Sewell, of New Jersey, is a railroad man, and is very wealthy. Senator John Sherman, of Ohio, it is said, is worth more than $2,000,000, his property consisting largely of real estate in Washington. Among other senators who write their fortune with seven figures are Cameron of Pennsylvania, Camden and Davis of West Virginia, Brown of Georgia, and Plumb of Kansas. Senators Hill of Colorado, Gorman of Maryland, McPherson of New Jersey, and Pendleton of Ohio, are all worth more than $500,000. Many other senators are comfortably fixed, possessing little hoards of from $50,000 to $100,000. Among those who have but little, comparatively here below—that is, not more than $100,000 apiece—are Morrill of Vermont, Anthony of Rhode Island, Rollins of New Hampshire, Jones of Nevada, Saunders of Nebraska, and Allison of Iowa.

The Development of Man.

Chicago Tribune.

The paper contributed to the May number of the Atlantic Monthly by Mr. John Fiske, the ablest of American philosophical writers, upon "The Arrival of Man in Europe," is one of extraordinary interest. As the results of his studies he finds that four races of men have successively lived in Europe. First, the men of the River Drift, who lived by hunting and used only rude chipped stone implements. Second, the Cave Men, now represented by the Esquimaux, who possessed the finer tools and weapons, and had some artistic sense. Third, the Iberians, who sharpened their implements, were farmers and weavers, built houses and boats, and it is believed had some knowledge of an existence after death. Fourth, the Aryans, who came from Central Asia and intermarried with the Iberians, and with them became the progenitors of the modern people of Europe. The men of the River Drift, Mr. Fiske believes, belonged to the Pleistocene period, which began 240,000 years earlier than that period. That Mr. Fiske is a devoted advocate of the evolution theory is shown by the following statement from his paper:

"We see man living on the earth for perhaps half a million years, to all intents and purposes dumb, leaving none but a geological record of his existence, progressing with infinite slowness and difficulty, making no history. Yet his geologic record is not quite like that of the dog or the ape, who could not chip a flint, and in the incised antlers of the Cave Men we see the first faint gleams of the divine intelligence that was by and by to shine forth with the glories of a Michael Angelo. We cannot but suppose that during those long dumb ages, through infinite hardship, and through the stern regimen of deadly competition and natural selection, man was slowly but surely acquiring that intellectual life which was at last to bloom forth in history, and which has made him 'the crown and glory of the universe.'"

Denver Noted.

DENVER, May 5.—A Leadville special says Constable James G. Eddy has disappeared mysteriously, leaving a wife and several bills.

The Republican's Pueblo special says: W. G. Moore, hatter, has assigned.

Gen. W. T. Sherman arrived in Denver from the west last night, on his tour of inspection. He is accompanied by his niece, Miss Lizzie Sherman, Miss Winifred Poe, and his adjutants, Col. O. M. Poe and Col. A. F. Morrow. The party will remain in the city till Saturday morning, when they leave for the east.

Snakes Quieted.

CHEYENNE, May 5.—A telegram just received from Fort Washakie states the Indians are quieted down. They committed no wrongs and will remain on the reservation. A courier from the Yellowstone country reports the Crows exasperated and ordering settlers. However they do this regularly every spring.

IRISH SUSPECTS.

Forster States His Reasons for Withdrawing.—Debate in the House.

LONDON, May 5.—In the house, in replying to the question by Mr. Joseph Cowen, the home secretary said Michael Davitt had been released for the same reasons as those for which the suspects had been released. No considerations were attached to his release, except those attached to his previous liberation. Mr. Gladstone said the charges of treasonable practices against Parnell will be withdrawn.

Forster stated his reasons for his withdrawal from the office of secretary for Ireland, and said he could not agree to the release of the suspects unless he got from them a public understanding of their intention to cease the opposing of the execution of the law. As he could not obtain that, he could not remain in office. He would have released the suspects if Ireland had been quiet, or if the government had had full powers, but he could not agree to the unconditional surrender. He admitted the condition of Ireland was better than in January, but it was still so bad that he wanted the government to let alone the subject of procedure until a fresh act securing punishment for outrages had been passed. By the coercion act he said he had broken up the league or put it under the control of petticoats.

Forster, in justifying the arrest of Parnell, said that Parnell, if he had been allowed, would have become uncrowned king of Ireland. Forster declared the proceedings of the imprisoned members had been far more dangerous than individual inciters to the outrages.

Gladstone in replying to a question said it had been intimated that the "no rent" manifesto would be withdrawn. Dillon, O'Kelly and Sexton stated such an intimation was without their authority. Gladstone stated the intimation came from Parnell. As that gentleman was absent Gladstone declined to make any further statement. Sir Henry Drummond Wolffe quoted Gladstone's declarations that the land league had caused outrages, rapine and murder. Sir Henry ridiculed the government for releasing the leaguers as if they were innocent men. The land league, he declared, had beaten the government, and Gladstone had recognized Parnell as ruler of Ireland. Sir Stafford Northcote thought the present aspect of affairs looked like a triumph for the agitators. Greeley asserted that the appointment of Lord Frederick Cavendish as chief secretary for Ireland was an endeavor to conciliate the Whig members of the cabinet. Home-rule members of parliament are much disappointed at the selection of Lord Cavendish.

Newspaper Change.

CHICAGO, May 5.—A New York special says the Mail and Express is reported to be about to change hands. John H. Starin and Howard Carroll are the reported purchasers.

An Old Mason.

CHICAGO, May 5.—A special from Oshkosh, Wis., announces the death of Ephriam Sherman Durfee, aged 97. He was worshipful master of the Rochester lodge of Masons in 1828, and conferred the degrees on Morgan, who subsequently exposed Masonry. Owing to the anti-Masonic excitement at the time Durfee was compelled to leave the country. He was a soldier in the war of 1812.

A Corruption Story Exploded.

LOUISVILLE, May 5.—J. M. Atherton, given as the source of rumors of corruption in the senate in connection with the bill extending the bonded period for spirits, has published a letter denying any knowledge of corruption of any member of either house.

TELEGRAPH BREVITIES.

The Chicagos beat the Clevelands yesterday 7 to 6.

Preparations are making for a national encampment of G. A. R. next month at Baltimore.

Further testimony has been heard at New Haven in the Malley trial for the murder of Jessie Cramer.

Alfred Doneyal of Atlanta, Ga., has been sentenced to be hanged June 29 for the murder of Policeman Hancock at Griffin.

John Davidson of Philadelphia who killed his mother, 60 years of age, by crushing her skull with a hatchet, has been arrested.

The Cincinnati chamber of commerce is taking steps to stop the spread of small-pox, which is injuring the trade of the city.

Weather in Ohio is seasonable, and farmers are busy planting, with good prospects. Strawberries and early vegetables are abundant.

Willis Pettit was hanged at Talaquah, Indian Territory, at noon yesterday, for the murder of Margaret Forde. The execution was private.

The Buddenberg furniture company at St. Louis has made an assignment. Liabilities are estimated at $100,000; assets, which include real estate, are worth $35,000.

Mayor Harrison has signed an ordinance permitting another gas company to do business in Chicago. This is the first competition to the present occupants of the field.

The fall of the staging of a foot bridge over the Connecticut river at Springfield, Mass., precipitated eight men to the ground 40 feet. One was fatally and two seriously hurt.

In the case of the election managers of Charleston, S. C., charged with ballot box stuffing, the jury disagreed. It is understood they were eight for conviction and four for acquittal.

Chamberlain, president of the board of trade, said in the house of commons he had seen statements in reference to the adulteration of American cotton imported into England but he did not consider it advisable for the government to take any action in the matter.

Mexican Items.

MEXICO, May 5.—The twentieth anniversary of the defeat of the French at Puebla was enthusiastically celebrated by parade and review of troops.

The Toluca section of the National railroad will be opened in fifteen days.

Longfellow's Will.

BOSTON, May 5.—It is announced that previous to proving Longfellow's will the heirs pledged themselves to carry out its intents, regardless of any legal formalities. The poet's brother Samuel will therefore receive a legacy of $50,000 and each of the children of the latter $1,000.

Business Failures.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Business failures reported for seven days numbered 161; or a decrease of nine compared with last week. Eastern states have had 13, Middle 19, western 36, southern 25, Pacific states and territories 18.

Explosion of Oil on a New Jersey Train.

EASTON, Pa., May 5.—This morning both trains on the Central Railway were blockaded by the breaking of a wheel under a train followed by an explosion. Several cars were consumed, with a loss of $30,000.

Central Pacific Management.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—Last night's dispatch regarding change in Central Pacific management is incorrect so far as it indicates that President Stanford retires from active duty in connection with the affairs of the corporation. Much, however, of the executive heretofore falling upon him will be devolved upon Mr. Towne.

FIRE

INSURANCE.

The Scottish Union and National Ins. Co.

This Company is among the oldest and strongest companies in the world. Its organization dates back to 1824. Of the ninety-five companies doing business on this coast, and the 189 reporting to the New York insurance department, in point of paid-up capital it ranks No. 3, while in point of assets it ranks 6. Adding its subscribed capital, subject to call, amounting to over $30,000,000, which, under the stringent laws of Great Britain governing unpaid capital, as fully illustrated in the failure of the Glasgow Bank, is available to the last dollar for its liabilities, it stands at the head of all the companies doing business in America, making in all, in actual resources, $31,767,800.88, and every policy issued pledges on its face, and in its contract binds its actual fire assets, every dollar of its authorized and subscribed capital of $30,000,000 to the payment of its fire losses.

"Uncle Reuben Lowder."

The Leadville Democrat has the following in regard to the company which is to appear here next Wednesday:

The Carner Herkimer Comedy company presented the new American comedy, "Uncle Reuben Lowder," at the opera house last evening. The audience was not large, but the comedy company, coming as it did upon the heels of such an attraction as Janauschek, is to be congratulated upon the success of its initial appearance in Leadville. Of the play it is sufficient to say that it is one of the funniest of funny American comedies, and Mr. Carner as Uncle Reuben has the dialect and gestures of the down-east farmer to perfection. Miss Cora Herkimer, in the role of Gertrude, did her part admirably, winning the admiration of the audience the first time she appeared on the stage, and held it throughout the evening. Mrs. Crane as Mrs. James Anthony and Dorothy Ann Smith, sustained her part well. Mr. Waite, as the false count, showed a thorough knowledge of the part, and did some really fine acting. The support, taken altogether, is good, and the play an artistic success.

DIED.

CAVE OF THE WINDS!

Now Open for the Season Of 1882,

Is located in William's Canon, one mile north from the Mineral Springs in Manitou.

There is no more pleasing or grand sight in Colorado and you miss a wonderful scene if you fail to see it.

There are large stalactites and grand old stalagmites with the most delicate and beautiful flowers. The sight of one room and grotto of the flower of alabaster is worth infinitely more than the expense and trouble of visiting the cave.

There are many rooms for you to visit, among which are Cascade, Canopy, Cathedral and Music Halls, Alabaster Grotto and the famous Bridal Chamber.

The air is pure and there is no water to injure or soil clothing. Wraps and lights furnished and attentive guides. Come and see us.
